

The Robber at the Library

by Sarah Upton (age 7), with help from Alyssa Upton (age 11)

Once upon a time, on a very dark night, a thief robbed the library.

“Oui, Oui, the library!” said the thief in a French voice. He went straight to the library and went in and stole some books, dropping some on the way out. And he went straight to his house where his brothers were.

He went in and said, “I stole some books from the library!”

“Great!” his brothers said.

In the morning, the librarians came in and tripped over the books!

“Cowabunga! Someone stole some books!” said the librarians. They called the police. They told detective Terry Monk what happened.

A police officer was spinning and wobbled. CLUNK!
The officer fell against Sarah Howards.

“Whoa, there!” said Sarah’s assistant, Alyssa Upton. As the police headed out of the library, they started to bump into each other! But the officers didn’t bump into Alyssa; only Sarah bumped Alyssa.

In the thieves' house, the thief got mad at his brothers.

“Stop that, you skunks!” said the thief to his brothers.

Soon the police figured out that the names of the thief and his brothers were John (the thief), Ernie, Bob, Larry, Curtain Junior, Pants, and Shirt.

Soon the police arrested John and took his brothers with them.
